Professional Positions

I have spent a lifetime working in the nonprofit sector.

- New Stories (<http://www.newstories.org>), 2000-Present; Co-President. I founded New Stories in 2000 as a nonprofit from which to explore the new stories beginning to emerge as we began to collectively imagine and act to create an alternative future. New Stories worked in partnership with The Berkana Institute and after several years I stepped fully into Berkana. After a period of dormancy, New Stories reemerged under new leadership and I became its Vice President. Now New Stories is engaged in a delightful body of work around Great Transition Stories, Thriving and Resilient Communities, new technologies for story telling, and also provides a base for my resilient communities work in Southern Africa and Japan.
- The Berkana Institute (<http://www.berkana.org>), Board Member, 2001-2011; Co-President, 2004-2009. For a decade, The Berkana Institute was my primary base for work in the world. Serving as Co-President from 2004-2009, we grew Berkana from a small nonprofit where Margaret Wheatley and Myron Rogers did their experimental work on life-affirming leadership to a nonprofit with offices in Spokane and Boston cultivating a field of inquiry and practice on life-affirming leadership. Much of our work centered on developing a translocal learning community of people and organizations called the Berkana Exchange. The Exchange existed to support action learning around practices of leadership for healthy and resilient communities working closely with a number of people and organizations in from Pakistan, India, Greece, Senegal, South Africa, Zimbabwe, Brazil, Mexico, US and Canada. Another key aspect of our work was to steward the development of a global community of practitioners called Art of Hosting Conversations that Matter (<http://www.artofhosting.org>) supporting each other in developing and using a variety of dialog and conversation methodologies to help people step into their leadership. In 2009, because of the economic recession, Berkana morphed into a self-organizing system and in 2012 closed its doors, at least for a time.
- Northwest Regional Facilitators (NRF), Cofounder and Executive Director, 1974-2000. The Environmental Symposium Series, described below, created a broad base of support in Spokane. At the close of EXPO '74 World's Fair, some of our staff and community advisors agreed to create a new nonprofit corporation which would help people think about what kind of future they wanted and how to get it. Beginning initially with citizen participation and community education work, NRF began to apply the same values to low-income housing development, childcare services and nonprofit capacity building. When I left in 2000 we had about 50 staff worked with combined annual operating budgets were around

$2 Million with annual construction budgets of $3-6 Million. After my departure NRF deconstructed itself into a number of different corporations:

- Spokane Housing Ventures, a nonprofit housing development and management corporation initially created as a subsidiary of NRF is now the largest nonprofit of it's kind in eastern Washington.
 - Northwest NonProfit Resources established itself as a separate 501(c)3 corporation, providing connection, services and advocacy for nonprofit corporations in the Inland Northwest
 - Spokane MarketPlace also became a separate 501(c)3 corporation which developed and managed Spokane's first public market
 - Child Care Resource and Referral became part of Community Minded Enterprises, a community services organization working in aligned areas.
 - NRF itself redefined itself as Community Frameworks and grew into a statewide housing agency with offices in Spokane as well as in the west side of the state, becoming one of the largest low income housing developers outside of King County.
 - Community Frameworks continued to operate the Lindaman NonProfit Center as an office and support center for small nonprofits in the Spokane area.
- EXPO '74 World's Fair Environmental Symposium Series, Program Director, 1973-1974. Working through OMSI, mentioned below, and other public education institutions in the Northwest, we created a program for the six-month World's Fair that featured an exhibit center and 26 conferences and symposia. We approached this work with an unusual orientation: We thought that people with different points of view should listen to each other! Conferences included three international symposia, a series of six topical symposia, twelve national perspective days and a variety of special conferences.
 - Oregon Museum of Science and Industry (OMSI), 1959-1973. In 1959, at the age of ten, I started working at Portland's new science museum. Over the next fifteen years I worked in all phases of Museum operation. Beginning with handing out handbills at the nearby Portland Zoo for fifty cents an hour, I was involved in everything from running the museum on weekends to serving as the research and development director for a startup company which took on Xerox in the elementary and secondary science education markets. It was an amazing way to grow up!

Teaching Positions

I began teaching at the graduate level while completing my doctoral research on enspirited leadership. I was attracted to teaching because I appreciated the intensity and commitment that adult learners brought with them. As a practitioner, I appreciated the opportunity to pause and reflect on what I was learning in my work in the world and to share that with others as we engaged together around questions of what makes enough of a difference to make a difference in our world today. I've taught at a number of institutions:

- ✓ Gonzaga University, Adjunct Faculty, Doctorate in Leadership Studies, 2004-present
- ✓ St. Mary's College of California, Adjunct Faculty, Masters of Leadership Program, 2002-03, 2011-present

Major Translocal Learning Events

For many years I have worked with teams to design and host gatherings that bring social innovators and entrepreneurs from across the world to exchange and create learning. We have called these translocal learning events rather than global to emphasize that they are based on sharing experience and wisdom from many local areas.

- BerkanaExchange, Art of Learning Centers – Zimbabwe-2008, Greece-2007, Mexico-2006, Canada-2005. Over time, the gatherings of the Berkana Exchange grew to more than 60 people who came together for 10 days. These translocal events brought people together from community-based leadership initiatives around the world who were already in learning relationship with each other through The Berkana Institute. I served as a primary designer and facilitator for each of these gatherings
- Pioneers of Change Summer School – South Africa-2004, Egypt-2003, Mexico-2002. Pioneers of Change was a global network of innovators and entrepreneurs in their 20s and 30s who came together around themes of social justice, ecological integrity, wise business and sustainable development. I was a Board Member, learning partner and engaged elder who supported them and assisted in the design and facilitation of these gatherings.
- Global Learning Village, Castle Borl, Slovenia, 2002. More than 100 people of all ages converged in Slovenia for a week long learning festival around themes and questions of sustainability, resilience, arts and culture, right livelihood. I was a member of the core design and hosting team.
- From The Four Directions: People Everywhere Leading the Way – UK-2000, US-2001, South Africa-2001. The Berkana Institute, New Stories and Peer Spirit launched a global leadership initiative based on dialog. We brought three different groups of 60 people from different parts of the world together for a four day practicum on leadership and hosting dialog. I served as event organizer and designer.

Public Policy Work

My work as Executive Director of Northwest Regional Facilitators often focused on the development and adoption of public policies in a wide variety of areas. This extensive work included:

2000s

- Served on the design and facilitation team to develop a new Master Plan for the Colville National Forest – a forest about the size of Rhode Island. An innovative stakeholder engagement process worked under the unifying theme of “there’s enough forest for all of us" that allowed everyone from timber harvesters to wilderness advocates to create a nationally acclaimed master plan. (Independent work after leaving NRF)

1990s

- Served as consultant to Spokane County, Washington, to design and facilitate a community engagement process to determine urban growth boundaries as part of a locally contentious, statewide Urban Growth Management Act.
- Served for 6 years on the Governors Nuclear Waste Advisory Council. Advised Washington Department of Ecology on cleanup of the Hanford Nuclear Reservations, the single largest nuclear waste depository in the US.
- Developed and facilitated participatory processes for the City of Renton, Washington on transportation, growth management and annexation. Renton is a crossroad for all vehicular and utility connections between west and east King County, Washington's largest urban area.

1980s

- Worked with others to create the Spokane Low Income Housing Consortium as a unified point of research and advocacy for low income housing in the greater Spokane Area.
- Worked with the Burlington Northern Foundation's President to convince then Washington Governor Booth Gardner to appoint the Governor's Task Force on Hunger which was a privately funded (Burlington Northern Foundation) and privately administered (Northwest Regional Facilitators) government commission. Established as a State Commission to determine the nature and extent of hunger in Washington State and to recommend public and private actions to alleviate hunger. I served as a member of the Executive Committee and supervised staff.
- Worked with the Junior League of Spokane and Eastern Washington University to create FutureSpokane, a "third generation" community futures program designed to mobilize private sector initiatives to improve quality of life in Spokane, Washington. Designed and organized this major public-private initiative with other community leaders.

- Worked with Kim Herman to form the Washington Coalition for Rural Housing which developed and successfully advanced a call for the creation of the Washington Housing Finance Commission in order to access low-income housing tax credits in Washington State. Herman became the first Executive Director of the Commission.
- Created a model public engagement process as part of the U.S. Bicentennial. Funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the program worked in four different parts of Washington State to combine community learning, community meetings and community surveys into a unique methodology for citizen engagement.
- Designed and conducted the community phase of Alternatives for Washington, a state futures program launched by Governor Booth Gardner and chaired by the founding President of Northwest Regional Facilitators, Whitworth College President Edward Lindaman.
- Began my work with citizen participation and public policy by working with the City of Spokane to design and facilitate a citizen engagement process working in Spokane's low-income neighborhoods to give residents in low-income neighborhoods considerable power to direct the City's Community Development Block Grant Program. Over the next 20 years the program created an entirely new relationship between City Hall and people in low-income neighborhoods in Spokane based on good communication and effective cooperation.

Main Volunteer Services

I work with many people in many parts of the world. In some cases I am able to devote the time and energy needed to support them as an active Board member. These have included:

- ✓ Member, Executive Advisory Cooperation Circle, United Religions Initiative, 2012-2013
- ✓ Member, Katerva Awards Spotters Network, 2012-2013
- ✓ Member, Board of Directors, New Stories, 2000-present (Founder, President 2000-2008, Co-President 2012-present)
- ✓ Member, Board of Directors, Berkana Institute, 2001-2011
- ✓ Member, Miratsuku, Emerging Future, Japan 2011-2013 (Co-Founder and Vice President)
- ✓ Advisor, Social Venture Partners – Shikoku, Japan 2011-present
- ✓ Member, Eagles Council, Kufunda Learning Village, Zimbabwe, 2002-present
- ✓ Member, Advisory Board, Lapeng Child and Family Center, Johannesburg, SA 2009-present
- ✓ Member, Board of Directors, Pioneers of Change, Johannesburg and London, 2001–2008

Work in Japan

I first went to Japan as a student in 1970 and discovered my spiritual home. In 2009, I was invited to bring my work on dialog, leadership and healthy and resilient communities into Japan. Since January, 2010 I have been working extensively in Japan, spending nearly half of my time each year in that country. It has been an amazing journey.

I have made dozens of presentations and hosted close to 100 workshops and dialog sessions since the beginning of 2010. In March, 2011, my work took on a much sharper focus as I began to work with many others from nonprofit organizations, academia, business, government and citizen advocacy groups to discover how the triple disasters of 3.11.11 might be used as a springboard to create a new future in Japan. Stories of my experience during this time can be found in blogs on the New Stories website.

Grants in 2012 and 2014 from Give2Asia allowed me to work across the disaster region to host dialogues to catalyze collaborative action and to introduce a community building and social innovation approach we call FutureCenters. This work is explored in my 2015 book from Tokyo's Eiji Press (in Japanese) and my 2017 book from Minneapolis's Mill City Books.
